

CHAPTER V

CONCLUSION AND SUGGESTION

A. Conclusion

This research was a true-experimental research composed of two variables. They were independent variable that was story completion method and dependent variable that was students' speaking skill. The aim of this research was to examine the effectiveness of the use story completion to improve students' speaking skill at the eleventh grade of SMK N 3 Jepara in academic year of 2020/2021. The conclusions were based on the previous chapter about the data analysis.

1. The students who are in experimental class taught by using story completion and the students who are in control class taught by using silent way. The result of pre-test showed that the experiment class got lower than control class with score difference was 2,5. Then, the result of post-test class the experimental class got higher score than control class with difference score was 7. Based on the score in pre-test and post-test, the experiment class improves significantly after giving the treatment.
2. There was significant effect of using story completion to improve students' speaking skill at the eleventh grade of SMK N 3 Jepara, it could be seen from the result of Independent sample t-test, it showed the result of significance was 4,772 that were more than t_{table} . It means that the alternative hypothesis (H_a) is accepted and the null hypothesis (H_0) is rejected. So, it could be described that the use of Story completion was effective to improve students' speaking skill at the eighth grade students of SMK N 3 Jepara in academic year 2020/2021.

B. Suggestion

Based on the result of this research, the researcher would like to give some suggestion as follows:

1. The teachers are suggested to use story completion as the method to help the students more active, interest and enjoy in the class.
2. The other researchers are suggested to observe more about story completion as method as their research, because there is little number that do the research about story completion method.
3. The students are suggested to study diligently about English especially in speaking skill because speaking skill is important in our life in this globalization era.
